Rosemary's Ramblings - September 2011

I checked the map. Yes, it definitely said "Green Lane", but the lane under my feet was far from green. Brown would have been a better description. Thick brown mud!!! Still, it couldn't go on forever and if I stuck to the middle of the track and stepped on the grassy mounds, my feet should keep reasonably dry.

Well, that good idea soon went out of the window as even the grass in the middle of the track became swallowed in squelchy, watery soil and mud. I persevered - I had come so far already, it couldn't be much further. And yes, my perseverance was rewarded as I rounded a corner and saw the gate and the end of the track just a few yards away.

But joy at the nearness of the gate soon turned to dismay. The gate itself was half submerged in thick mud and it was not one gate, but two old, very rusty, unsupported metal gates. First, I needed to cross over the now deep muddy track. Then I needed to somehow climb over the gates, even though I knew they would not support my weight. I found a dead twig and tried to use that for support to get me across the track - but that broke and disappeared in the mud. I made the decision to edge gingerly across the bottom rung of the gates so that I could at least cross over the track, but half way across the gates began to collapse. I fell with them although I managed to keep upright. Ankle deep in mud, my only option was to try and use the now flattened gates as a kind of cattle grid before they sank completely into the mud.

We meet God in many places - I had not expected to meet God when I was out walking during my retreat. But in the safety of the retreat centre whilst waiting for my trainers and trousers to wash, I realised just how God had spoken to me. You see, going back, retracing my steps was never an option I considered. Besides turning back would have meant going back through all the mud I had just encountered and for what purpose other than failure. Having hung on in, just when I thought the end was in sight I was confronted by a huge obstacle - the gate - which caused me physical pain in order to get over it.

Life, as I have often said before, is a journey. Sometimes, often, the journey is difficult. We find ourselves plodding through the mud, unsure and uncertain of the way forward. Sometimes, often, the way forward seems blocked. We encounter many obstacles on our journey, some of which cause us great pain. But ultimately we arrive, weary and covered with the stains of life's journey. But we do arrive and we arrive with God. Happy rambling!!!

We pray peace and the comfort of God for Alastair and Eric at this time of parting.

We hope everyone has had an enjoyable summer and are feeling both physically and spiritually refreshed.

Living in the countryside we are conscious, at this time of the year, of the end of the harvest. Our farmers have been working flat out day and night to get the harvest in. The task they face now is to prepare the fields for sowing to produce next year's harvest.

As we go into the Autumn/Winter's work in our Churches let us pray that seeds will be sown that we may experience a harvest of people in our villages coming to faith in Christ, also as Christians that our own lives will be more fruitful.

Humorous Moments

A parishioner was confiding in his vicar: "When you get to my age, you spend a lot more time thinking about the hereafter."

"That's good," approved the vicar, "and what do you conclude?"

"Nothing much," went on the parishioner. "It's just that more and more I find myself going into a room and thinking "now what on earth did I come in here after?"

- o O o -

Two members of the congregation are talking. "Did you know, our minister composes all his sermons on his I-phone. He uses something called 'predictable text ....'

Long Buckby News

Dear Friends

How quickly the days and months seem to slip away; and after two months of last writing to you, the seasons have changed from summer to autumn. The leaves are changing colour and preparing for the time when they will eventually fall off and leave most of the trees and shrubs bare. We still have the holly and a few more shrubs, like the euonymus, especially the "emerald gaiety" that look good all the year round.

I hope that most of you have been able to get out and about to see these lovely pictures that nature gives us. If not able to get out and about, there is always the TV programmes which take us to places we would never normally visit in our lifetime.

We have been celebrating the harvest during the months of September and we sincerely hope that the crops have been reasonably good this year as the farmers have to work hard, sowing, planting and reaping and having to rely on the weather to ensure a successful harvest.

There have been many disasters in other countries this year, some suffering drought and others so much rain that everywhere is flooded. We thank God that in our country we have a variety of weather (not always just what we want), but we don't often go to the extreme.

I hope most of our readers are well. I do know of some Church friends and others who are poorly and we send them all our love and remember them in our prayers.

Best wishes to you all and keep well and happy.

Gwennie Wilkes

Telephone Scams

The Police have been drawing people's attention to some telephone "cons" that can sound very convincing and are often targeted at the elderly and vulnerable.

- ◆ You receive a phone call - the person says "congratulations, you have won some money". They then ask for your bank account details in order to pay the money into your account. When you have handed over the numbers, it is likely your hard earned savings or wages are being transferred away from your account never to be seen again - and of course, you don't having any "winnings" paid in.
- ◆ You receive another phone call - " Congratulations, you have won a holiday in the recent competition you entered". While you are wondering "what competition?" the caller is cleverly wording the next sentence to win you over so you hand over your bank details in order to receive the holiday.....
- ◆ You go on the door - "I'm interested in the car you're selling" and while the transaction goes through OK and cash is given for the car, some time later the buyer returns stating the car was unsafe and his family were at risk. He wants his money back and tries to show you pictures on his phone of a car part you don't recognise as the car you sold to him. Many people will hand over money simply to get rid of the person or to avoid retribution.

These types of scams are done by professionals and it is how they gain an income. They usually call on the elderly or vulnerable people. So please be aware of this if you receive unexpected calls of a similar nature.

The Dieter's Psalm

Strict is my diet, I must not want,
It maketh me to lie down at night, hungry.
It leadeth me past the sweet shop,
It trieth my will power,
It leadeth me in the paths of starvation
For my figure's sake,
Yea, though I walk through the aisle of the pastry department
I will buy no sweet cakes for they are fattening.
The pies and biscuits, they tempt me.
Before me is set a plate of celery and lettuce.
My day's quota runneth over.
Surely calories and weight charts shall
Follow me all the days of my life
And I shall dwell in the fear of the Scales for ever.

Odd Bequests

Being worth their weight in gold was made literally true in the case of two Scottish girls whose father, turning upside down the idea that all his race are mean, made this provision in his will in 1877. Thomas Black of Kilmarnock declared: "And as for my daughter, M... And J..., I direct that my executor should have them weighed and then give to each the equivalent weight in one pound bank notes."

(The younger girl, who was somewhat plump, did better than her older sister, receiving £57,344 from the will, while the other got a mere £51,200).

The Soft Contented Sigh of an Autumn Breeze

The russet rain of autumn falls gently upon the ground.
The silent tears of summer cascading all around.
There is sadness for the passing season, in the falling of the leaves,
But autumn has no thought for why the summer grieves.

The outstretched arms of summer reach imploringly to the sky,
As high above migrating birds in close formation fly.
The raindrops fall inexorably, slipping from arboreal fingers,
Daylight shrinks with each passing day, as summer no longer lingers.

An air of tranquil serenity descends upon the earth,
The season's growth is over until next spring's rebirth.
For now the arms of Mother Earth reach out in soft embrace,
As summer's swansong dies on the wind, and autumn assumes her place.

Glistening dew hangs all around in the cool morning air,
And diamond-studded webs of silk betray a spider's lair.
Rustling in the fallen leaves, a squirrel gathers its winter
store,

And the insects in the undergrowth tunnel new quarters
'neath the forest floor.

The earth sighs in contentment, for the summer's work is done,
Now with the falling russet rain, autumn's time has come.
The forest yawns in readiness for its time to rest is nigh,
And the breeze echoes through the empty boughs, in a soft contented sigh.
